Greetings!

Why Do We Have Such a Large Problem with Vacant Properties?

MHC is doing research on some of the systems that may cause properties to be left unusable

by Cathy Hinko

Louisville still has problems with vacant properties. At Louisville Vacant Properties Campaign (LVPC) meetings (held the third Tuesday of the month at the Shelby Park Community Center, 600 East Oak Street), we discuss how some of our systems contribute to the problem of long vacant properties. People with different aspects of expertise bring their knowledge to the table.

As a result of the February LVPC meeting, MHC is starting a research project to see how properties are prevented from reuse AFTER judgment is rendered in a foreclosure case.

The Foreclosure Process
When you hear the term "foreclosure" you know it is about real estate, but the theory is the same as when your car gets repossessed. You take out a loan to buy a home (the loan is called a mortgage so you know it is real estate), and you put up the home as collateral. This means that if you do not make payments, the home can be sold for money to pay back the loan. But for that to happen, the lender has to file a court case claiming you did not make your payments and ask to win the case. If the Court says the lender wins ("renders a judgment"), then the lender has the right to have the property sold through a Master Commissioner's Sale. If the sale of the home brings in all or more money to cover the debt, then there is no further judgment for money against the person who failed to pay the mortgage. In fact, that person can claim any money from the sale of the home in excess of the debt.

Once the sale goes through, the purchaser asks the Master Commissioner for a deed, and then the purchaser files the deed.

A Simple Process? Not quite...
Should be simple, right? Well... almost total control of the court case and the sale is in the hands of the lender, and sometimes they have no reason to move forward. If the Court had a timeline for pushing these cases through, it would help ease the limbo properties go into when there is a case.

First of all, most foreclosures are not contested. So the control to move the cases forward is in the hands of the lender that brought forward the law suit. But in MHC's 2012 report analyzing properties brought into foreclosure in 2007, showed that it took almost a year for the case to move through the system and go to a Master Commissioner sale. LVPC members felt that many properties are withdrawn from the sale, leaving the property in limbo.

Next we found that even after a sale, the new purchaser has the responsibility to ask for a deed from the Master Commissioner. In our 2012 report, we found that 7% of the properties sold never had a deed change.

We think this problem has increased, but the only way to know is to track what happens to the property. MHC is going to look at the list of properties that were up for sale last year on random days and see what eventually happened to each property. Is it withdrawn? If so, does it ever go up for sale? If there is a sale, is there ever a deed requested?

Join the Cause & Help
If anyone wants to help, let us know. We are learning the research techniques ourselves and are happy to include you. Once we know what happens, we can then advocate for sound policies and procedures to get houses back into reuse.

Louisville Cares Now Accepting Applications from Developers for Funding to Build Affordable Housing
by Will Ford of Develop Louisville

In May 2015, Mayor Fischer announced Louisville Creating Affordable Residences for Economic Success (Louisville CARES), a new revolving loan program designed to address the need for affordable, multi-family housing for working households making 80% or less of the Area Median Income (AMI).

The Louisville AMI is $64,100. 46% of Louisville households have incomes at or below 80% of AMI. This equates to an income of $51,300 for a family of four or $35,950 for an individual.

Housing is considered affordable when a family pays no more than 30% of its gross income on housing costs, including utilities. A Jefferson County family must earn $28,200 per year or $13.55 an hour (43% of AMI) to afford a non-subsidized 2-bedroom apartment. According to the Federal Housing Finance Agency, roughly 218,000 workers (37% of Louisville’s workforce) earn less than $28,200 per year.

Louisville CARES was introduced to create approximately 750 new affordable units. Through housing filtering effects, it will positively affect 750 additional households for a total of 1,500 units in the first two years. The program was created as part of a larger solution to collectively create or retain 24,000 units by 2030.

Louisville CARES complements existing CDBG and HOME programs that provide a variety of housing assistance, including rehabilitation and repair grants, for low to moderate income individuals. These programs have created or retained roughly 3,000 units of housing since 2011 and are on track to create or retain an additional 2,000 units by 2018.

The $12 million revolving loan fund was created by bonding $1.3 million in General Fund revenue. $11 million will be utilized to provide gap financing to developers building projects for workforce housing that are 100% affordable and to developers who want to incorporate affordable workforce housing into market rate projects. The remaining $1 million will be utilized by Louisville Metro to purchase land near employment centers that will be offered as an incentive for multi-family workforce rental housing development.

In the interest of being as flexible as possible in addressing the need for gap financing in multi-family affordable rental housing projects, Louisville CARES has been structured as a rolling application process in which developers can seek financing as it is required for their projects rather than as a more structured formal competitive process. The funds will be deployed as loans that can be layered with other types of project financing.
