The last week of October is International Lead Poisoning Prevention week. The focus is on prevention since lead is a cumulative poison, absorbed but not eliminated by the body. Toxic lead exposure remains a top environmental health hazard to young children in the U.S. (per the Center for Disease Control), although most children with exposure are never diagnosed, show no symptoms until later in life, and suffer mild to severe IQ loss, ADHD, and behavior and learning disorders.

Thank you everyone for your support during Give Local Louisville! It was a huge success!

On November 1, Louisville Mayor Fischer will recognize MHC for an initiative to kick off a lead poisoning prevention year for MHC and its partners. MHC’s “Get the Lead Out” initiative was selected for a Mayor’s Healthy Hometown grant to recruit other community partners to join in promoting recent best practices to raise awareness about the common dangers of lead exposure and empower families and community groups to play a far more significant role in fighting this epidemic.

But the CDC is urging prevention to identify common hazards in the home and take steps before a child is poisoned at any level.

Recently, the CDC dramatically lowered its “action level” for child blood levels, triggering when immediate public health actions should be taken to protect a child and emphasized “there is no safe level of lead in a child.”

The leading cause of child lead poisoning is from lead based paint, which was not banned in the U.S. until 1978, after most homes in Louisville were built. Even newer homes can contain lead hazards from old vinyl mini-blinds, painted antiques, and other items, but the majority of child lead poisoning is linked to pre-1978 homes through conditions that create household dust containing toxic lead.

Research shows the majority of children who are poisoned unknowingly ingest microscopic amounts of lead dust from normal hand-to-mouth activity. And it takes only millionths of a gram of lead paint dust to poison a child. New innovative approaches to identify lead hot spots in a home are available along with recommended safe practices to rid areas of lead.

Organizing the community on this issue is a natural fit for MHC, since this entirely preventable epidemic is so linked with housing. “Get the Lead Out” will build upon the success of Louisville Metro Government Lead Safe Louisville’s home lead test kit distribution.

MHC is enlisting community groups in low-income neighborhoods and partnering with local government, companies, and other nonprofits to empower parents to learn how to easily detect lead in the home through distribution of instant lead kits.

MHC is also helping link families to resources and information on practical and affordable ways to eliminate hazards and protect children from being exposed to lead based paint hazards.

MHC would like to thank Louisville Metro Government and the Mayor’s Healthy Hometown Movement for funding our “Get the Lead Out” initiative!

It is estimated that 1 in 3 children under the age of 18 in the United States have had measurable lead exposure at some point (visit leadsafeamerica.org for links to research from the CDC and others).

Research shows that children with histories of prolonged lead exposure enter school with diminished reading and learning abilities, and experience learning and behavior disorders at increased rates as they enter adolescence and teen years.

“Get the Lead Out” enjoyed a great kickoff event on October 22nd at the Louisville Zoo Halloween Event. Partnering with Louisville Metro Health and Wellness and the Lead Safe Louisville Department, MHC sponsored a booth at the event and organized volunteers from Mercy Academy, duPont Manual, LockUpLead, Healthy Home Louisville, Louisville Metro Health & Wellness, and Louisville Metro Department of Housing to help distribute approximately 1000 instant lead test kits provided by Lead Safe Louisville to families living in pre-1978 housing.

Along with test kits, information on how to maintain a lead safe home and child blood testing were also provided along with treats for young children.

As MHC kicks off our Get the Lead Out initiative, please spread the word and share our stories on social media to help connect us with community groups of all sorts that may be interested in having us come to provide free lead test kits and provide helpful information so that they too can join the efforts to empower families to promote lead free children for a healthy future!

MHC also wants to thank our major partner in this initiative LockUpLead!
How to get involved with the Comprehensive Plan

MHC strongly encourages you to sign up for the Comprehensive Plan process. Remember this is the plan for the built environment of Louisville for 20 years! Whatever your passion - fair housing, affordable housing, healthy neighborhoods, transit and modes of transportation, how we prepare for our aging residents, environmental issues, heat islands, trees, there are 6 work groups. They are:

• Mobility (Transportation)
• Community Form
• Community Facilities
• Housing
• Livability and Environment
• Marketplace (Economic Development)

Metro Government is hosting a kick-off meeting for all work groups on:

Saturday, November 5, 2016 from 9:00 - 10:30 am Memorial Auditorium (970 S. 4th Street) in the 2nd Floor Ballroom.

Ample parking should be available in the lot at 5th St. and W. Kentucky St. Attendance is not mandatory but is highly encouraged for all work group members.

If you are able to attend the meeting on November 5th, please RSVP to Kelly Probus at Kelly.probus@louisvilleky.gov

At the meeting, they will provide background on the Comprehensive Plan and an overview of the process. Each group will go over its work plan and discuss future meeting dates and times.

If you cannot make the meeting that day, you can still join a committee by visiting: https://louisvilleky.gov/government/planning-design/work-groups

New Tools and Strategies for Reclaiming Vacant Properties

There are some new tools to help reclaim vacant property, and your neighborhood may be interested. The Louisville Vacant Property Campaign worked with Louisville Metro’s Vacant and Public Property Administration and the Louisville Metro Council’s Ad Hoc Vacant Property Committee to present the new abilities to reclaim property in a great presentation on September 26.

The first new tool- the spot condemnation law was amended to make it a useful tool in reclaiming deteriorated property. Formerly, it had been so expensive it was rarely used. The change is that when the mandatory appraisals are done, the appraiser can also factor in the cost of bringing the property to code. For instance, if the property is appraised at $20,000, in the past Metro government would have had to pay $20,000. But under the new rules, if it is appraised at $20,000 but it would cost $15,000 to bring it up to code, the cost to Metro is $5,000.

So if your neighborhood has a property deteriorating, but still salvageable, this may be a useful tool and your group should contact Metro’s Vacant Property Administration. FYI, all the notice requirements and protections for owners are still in place and it still requires Metro Council approval and then a court case. Only the appraisal part changed.

The second new tool- the city now has the ability to declare census tracts, in areas that meet strict criteria, to have a moratorium on selling property tax liens to third parties. This really is about neighborhood revitalization. Any time a tax lien is sold to a third party they get all the privilege of government without any of the responsibility.

The sale of the tax liens has been a really big impediment to neighborhood revitalization. By being able to declare a moratorium on selling the liens, there is local control and strategy on being able to make the property useful.

The responsibility to pay property taxes is still as strict and the consequences for non-payment can be loss of ownership, but the process is locally controlled. Your neighborhood may have census tracts where this new tool can help keep properties attractive to improvements and reuse.

There is the possibility of more useful tools becoming available, but these are things that require changes to the law at state level. MHC will present its legislative agenda for the 2017 state legislative session in November.
