Making Louisville Home for Us All

On Thursday, February 13th, the Louisville Metro Human Relations Commission (LMHRC) released a 20-year action plan for improving fair housing, Making Louisville Home For Us All: A 20-Year Action Plan for Fair Housing, as part of the LMHRC’s annual Race & Relations Conference.

The report was researched and produced for the LMHRC by the University of Louisville’s Anne Braden Institute for Social Justice Research in consultation with the Metropolitan Housing Coalition (MHC), which coordinated the development of the action steps outlined in the report. The report is available as a free download at MHC’s Website: www.metropolitanhousing.org.

Making Louisville Home for Us All details Louisville’s history of discrimination in housing and efforts over time to combat that discrimination. The report documents, utilizing many kinds of data, that residential segregation remains a major problem in metro Louisville and suggests forward-looking remedies. The report analyzes action steps developed from the 2010 report Analysis of Impediments to Fair Housing Choice in Louisville Metro, KY. Making Louisville Home for Us All contains goals to effectively measure and continuously improve fair housing choice in our community.

According to Catherine Fosl, University of Louisville social scientist and lead researcher of the report, “This 20-year action plan offers concrete steps for making fair and affordable housing a reality in metro Louisville. Unlike many action plans in major cities all across the USA, it is firmly grounded in our local history. That history includes persistent structural residential segregation and discrimination that are 20-Year Plan CONT.

The Utah Solution

This article by Jordan Riley is reprinted with permission from the Indiana Daily Student, the Indiana University newspaper, which ran it on January 31, 2014. Jordan was a volunteer intern with MHC when she was in high school and still understands housing issues.

Utah recently proved once again that the simplest solution is often the best by coming up with a genius plan to solve their homelessness issue — providing houses for homeless people. They crunched the numbers and found the cost of medical bills and arrests for homeless people is actually $5,670 more than simply housing them.

Most states have been blaming and punishing people for their homelessness. Utah has instituted a plan that will actually solve the problem, instead of shifting blame.

Most cities set restrictions on homeless individuals, such as where they can be and for how long. Some states have even restricted other people from feeding homeless people, likening them to pigeons and other pests. These policies have so far been ineffective.

It turns out that even when you arrest these people, wake them up or tell them to move, they remain homeless. You haven’t really changed anything.

People still rely on these policies because of the stigma that homeless people are on the street because they choose to be, because they are lazy drug addicts that refuse to help themselves.

with us still, but it also includes concerted effort and creative initiatives by many Louisvillians working together in search of ending housing disparities and reducing poverty. That kind of long term commitment by government and business leaders and ordinary citizens is an important part of what lies ahead in rooting out the vestiges of discrimination and making Louisville home for us all."

"Louisville’s current segregation is a legacy of past policies spanning decades”, said Cathy Hinko, Executive Director of the Metropolitan Housing Coalition. "Having action steps to further fair housing that takes us out twenty years is the right framework for the future for Louisville,” said Hinko. "There are immediate action steps to take, but there must be a long-term commitment."

Hinko identified two action steps she believes are real "game changers": Making fair housing a mandatory lens for review of all actions by all parts of Metro government and the development and utilization of a market analysis to assess housing demand by area of the city, type of housing, price/rental points needed and connection to job centers.

The principal editor and author of the report is Catherine Fosl, PhD. Contributors include Cathy Hinko, Nicole Cissell, Amber Duke, Curtis Stauffer, Joshua Poe, Mariam Williams, and Dana Loustalot Duncan, with special assistance from Tracy E. K'Meyer, PhD.

The report was made possible through 2012-13 partnership funds to the LMHRC as a Fair Housing Assistance Program agency, part of the Affirmatively Furthering Fair Housing program of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD)/Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity (FHEO).

What should be obvious is that no one would actively choose to live on the street. Once there, however, one might be more concerned with exposure, not getting arrested and keeping themselves and their belongings safe — instead of making sure they aren’t an eyesore to the more fortunate.

Significant portions of homeless people are afflicted with mental or physical disabilities that make it hard for them to find and keep work. Others are blindsided by extreme circumstances, and find that once they are on the streets, it becomes significantly harder to get back on their feet.

The prejudice and victim blaming directed at homeless people contribute to this.

It’s true that addiction is another contributor to homelessness. Instead of blaming those who have succumbed to this, Utah’s policy addresses this problem as well.

Utah’s new policy gives the homeless a safe place to live as well as providing each person a social worker focused on helping them become self-sufficient. Utah’s government has created one of the first humane and effective solutions to a problem that most U.S. cities deal with, including Bloomington.

Bloomington has a homeless population noticeable to anyone glancing down Kirkwood Avenue, and no one really seems to be doing anything that helps. Last December, 24-year-old Ian Stark froze to death in Bloomington. This tragedy incited many Bloomington natives to march on the mayor’s office, as well as a few less-legal displays of unrest.

If Bloomington can adopt the same progressive and cost effective approach as Utah, then everybody wins. Downtown areas look cleaner, and the homeless get to change the only truly offensive thing about them — the suffix of their title.
